Gender Pay Summary

As our data shows our mean gender pay gap is 6%, and we understand what is driving this, we acknowledge that there is work to do. We are committed to the principle of gender pay equality and need to look at steps we may be able to take to reduce or eliminate our gender pay gap.

We are confident that syncreon's gender pay gap is not a pay issue, we know this because our approach to pay is gender neutral by design and our analysis shows that our pay gap is driven by the structure of our workforce. In determining pay and reward for our employees we balance a number of factors, including the economic climate, company performance as well as the external market for the roles that we offer.

syncreon Automotive UK employs and promotes staff based on merit and regardless of any protected characteristic.

Work/Life balance is one of syncreon's Core Values and we offer our employees a range of flexible working options in support of this. These options include part-time working, job share, home working, flexi-time and we comply with statutory leave entitlements. Some of our employees choose these options where they can be facilitated.

We will be open and transparent with our employees about our gender pay gap and will encourage them to contribute ideas for ensuring the gender pay gap is reduced or eliminated in the future. Through our Employee Forums, we will encourage employees to raise issues that they believe contribute to gender inequality and we will work with them to break down barriers where they exist.

We are calling on other organisations we work with who supply syncreon Automotive UK with employees or workers to support us, where possible, in reducing or eliminating our gender pay gap.

I confirm that syncreon Automotive UK have prepared our 2017 gender pay gap results in line with mandatory requirements and the data reported is accurate.
